Toute la région métropolitaine de Montréal passe en alerte orange

Le ministre de la Santé, Christian Dubé, a annoncé que toute la Communauté métropolitaine de Montréal (CMM) devenait une « zone orange ». La MRC de La Rivière-du-Nord, dont fait partie Saint-Jérôme, passe elle aussi au palier orange, a-t-il indiqué.

Outre Montréal et les quelque 80 municipalités regroupées au sein de la CMM, l'Outaouais, Laval, Chaudière-Appalaches, ainsi qu'une partie des régions de la Capitale-Nationale, de Lanaudière, des Laurentides et de la Montérégie sont actuellement sous le coup d'une alerte orange. C'est donc dire que les résidents de ces régions doivent désormais limiter les rassemblements privés à 6 personnes (ou deux familles) et éviter les déplacements interrégionaux. Les bars et restaurants devront cesser de vendre de l'alcool au-delà de 23 h.

Quebec's private seniors residences see a steady rise in COVID-19 cases

A slow but steady rise of COVID-19 cases in Quebec's private seniors residences in recent weeks is causing concern among experts and authorities, who want to avoid the disaster that befell long-term care homes during the first wave of the novel coronavirus. As of Wednesday evening, there were 39 private residences in Quebec with 180 COVID-19 cases between them listed on the government's website. Four among them were described as "critical" because more than 25 per cent of their residents were infected. In comparison, only 20 long-term care homes (CHSLD) were listed as having cases. One facility was listed as critical.

Avignon bubble to shrink to Listuguj First Nation and Pointe-à-la-Croix, Quebec

A rise in COVID-19 cases in Avignon Municipal Regional County in Quebec has prompted the provincial government to limit day trips from that region to only residents of the Listuguj First Nation and Pointe-à-la-Croix near Campbellton. The new rule goes into effect at noon on Friday, Sept. 25.

Travel for non-essential purposes from elsewhere in Avignon is no longer permitted. Travel for work, medical care or child care/custody continues to be permitted.

With 2 or more COVID symptoms, students and parents can expect to be home a week

Chief Medical Officer of Health Dr. Jennifer Russell said Friday that she knows it's a problem and people in the Health Department are trying to improve the situation.

Russell said the goal is to have appointments scheduled within a couple of days and results back within 72 hours of having a test done.

But that means even if the goal is met, students and their parents can still expect to be home from school and work for a full week or more.

Russell said she hopes employers can be flexible because this situation is likely going to continue through the school year.
