Third flight from Haiti lands in Montreal with many COVID-infected passengers

For the third time in 10 days, so many passengers on an Air Transat flight from Port-au-Prince to Montreal tested positive for COVID-19 that Health Canada deemed the entire plane impacted by the virus. Two Air Transat flights from Port-au-Prince last week were also listed by Health Canada as having 'all rows' impacted by COVID.

Health-care pressure: Number of Atlantic Canadians over 75 will double in 20 years

Published Thursday, January 21, 2021

A new study says the number of seniors in Atlantic Canada will increase by 32 per cent over the next 20 years, putting added pressure on the region's health-care system and labour market.

The study released Thursday by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council says the most rapid growth will be among older seniors.

Policy analyst Fred Bergman said the number of Atlantic Canadians aged 75 and older will double by 2040.

The independent think-tank says these changes in demographic patterns will have significant implications for the region's economy.

Atlantic Canada's population is already the oldest in Canada.

By 2040, there will be three seniors for every two young people in the region, the council says.
