N.B. COVID-19 roundup: Stricter level 2 restrictions come into effect Monday night

New Brunswick is moving to stricter level two COVID-19 restrictions at 11:59 p.m. on Monday as the province sees record-high infection numbers.

- Household contacts must be limited to a maximum of a steady 10 individuals.

- Dining-in is permitted in restaurants, but they must operate at 50 per cent capacity and request proof-of-vaccination.
- Restaurants, retail stores, malls, businesses, gyms, salons and spas, and entertainment centres may continue to operate, but at 50 per cent capacity and with two metres of distance between patrons.
- For public gatherings, venues cannot have events with more than 150 people or 50 per cent capacity, whichever is less.
- Faith venues may operate at 50 per cent capacity and with physical distancing, and choirs are not permitted.
- All travellers, including New Brunswickers returning to the province, must register or have a multi-use travel pass. Travellers arriving by air will be provided with a rapid test kit.
- Unvaccinated people entering the province must isolate and be tested on day 10. International travellers must follow federal testing and isolation guidelines and must be tested on day five and day 10.
- Travellers must follow public health measures when in New Brunswick, including wearing a mask and staying within a steady 10 list of contacts.
- Employees are encouraged to work from home.
